Lauren Rosenfeld, co-author of Breathing room: Open Your Heart by Decluttering Your Home feels that decluttering is a reflective spiritual practice that can impede our ability to identify and embrace what is truly important in our lives. I so agree with this. If we are not paying attention we start to collect too many things that end up taking away from the stuff in life that really matters.

Breathing Room; Your To Be List; Get in Touch; Select Page. All of life is a practice of letting go. If we can see this for what it is, we can be happy. If we deny it, then life becomes a practice of clinging. And all clinging causes suffering. If you are cluttered, it is because you are in the habit of clinging to things that you believe might bring you happiness, when in fact these very ...
