Breathing Water is a novel written by T. Greenwood about the ability to stay naïve and tenderhearted in the midst of heartbreak. Effie, the main character in the novel is small and kind though damaged. Her ex-boyfriend and conflicting character Max is true to his physical appearance. He is large and unintentionally harsh.

Despite Greenwood's attempts to give the story cosmic values, it is essentially a schematic account of the usual: smart girl doing dumb things until she finally does wise up. Effie Greer, the English major protagonist, fell in love at college with the wrong man. Max was an abusive psychopath, but Effie moved in with him anyway and even brought him along after graduation to spend the summer at her family's camp on a Vermont lake. But then, after a terrible quarrel that Effie feels she may ...

"A poignant, clear-eyed novel" about a Vermont homecoming and a reckoning with tragedy (The New York Times Book Review). Effie Greer has been away from Lake Gormlaith, Vermont, for three years. Now she is coming home. The unspoiled lake, surrounded by dense woods and patches of wild blueberries, is the place where she spent idyllic childhood summers at her grandparents' cottage.
