The Constitution of South Africa is the supreme law of the Republic of South Africa. It provides the legal foundation for the existence of the republic, it sets out the rights and duties of its citizens, and defines the structure of the Government. The current constitution, the country's fifth, was drawn up by the Parliament elected in 1994 in the South African general election, 1994.

South Africa did in fact have a constitution before the interim Constitution of 1994 and the final Constitution of 1996 (see history of the Constitution). But that "tricameral" constitution - which created separate parliaments for whites, coloureds and Indians but denied blacks a say in government - was not supreme. It was subject to the whims of parliament - in this case, an unrepresentative one.

The 1949 Constitution, which today governs Germany, is a slightly amended version of West Germany's 1949 Constitution. The history of the German Basic Law is unique as it originated after WWII and was based on the influence of occupying foreign nations. While the Reich government still existed in theory after the war, the institutions of the German government were completely destroyed.
