The Inferior is based in a fictional world, which, arguably, could be futuristic. It highlights the main attributes of humanity, perhaps questioning our own society, and yet I consider it light reading that is addictive and pleasurable. Stopmouth, the protagonist hero and main character of the novel, faces humanity's responses to a desperate situation. His brother, Wallbreaker, betrays Stopmouth on a very personal level, and Stopmouth is left questioning everything that he has ever ...

STOPMOUTH AND HIS family know of no other life than the daily battle to survive. To live, they must hunt rival species, or negotiate flesh-trade with those who crave meat of the freshest human kind. It is a savage, desperate existence. And for Stopmouth, considered slowwitted hunt-fodder by his tribe, the future looks especially bleak. But then, on the day he is callously betrayed by his ...

The Bone World Trilogy is a trilogy for young adults by Irish author Peadar Ó Guilín. The series has elements of science fiction and fantasy. The first book in the trilogy, The Inferior, was published by David Fickling Books in 2007 (2008 in the U.S.A.), and the sequel, The Deserter, was published in September 2011.

With echoes of Tarzan, Conan the Barbarian, and The Truman Show, Peadar Ó Guilín's debut is an action—and idea-packed—blockbuster that will challenge your perceptions of humanity and leave you hungry for more.

I thought that "The Inferior", the first book in this trilogy was a very original science fiction novel that wasn't quite like anything else I'd read. The vision of a nightmarish world without any edible vegetation where the only way humanity can survive is by making war on and eating the other sentient alien races which inhabit the world is a very memorable premise. The sequel, "The Deserter" had taken the protagonists out of their own world and put them in a more conventional ...

If The Inferior was OK, The Deserter, the second book in The Bone World trilogy, is quite weak. The story continues with Stopmouth trying to get to the surface to get to Indrani, and while he does get there, it's not really his merit. And when he finally arrives, the world there is just as dumb and savage as the one beneath.

Peadar O'Guilin explores the flip side of world building in The Deserter. From primitive to technologically advanced O'Guilin makes you think savages are far more civilized and complex than their Roof counterparts. I thought the imagery was great but the pacing a little slow, I had to work through this one, but there were some pulse pounding action scenes sprinkled throughout to keep the ...

Guilin's first book ever published was titled The Inferior. It was released in 2007 by David Fickling Books and was the debut novel of the exciting fictional series, the Bone World Trilogy. This was followed by The Deserter in 2014 and The Volunteer the same year, finalizing the trilogy forever. The Bone World Trilogy follows the main character of Stopmouth and his family's battle to ...

The trilogy started on a high note with The Inferior, and the story was build strongly upon with The Deserter. However, as much as I enjoyed The Volunteer, I felt that the writing diminished slightly and though still immersive; it felt rushed and not as well thought out as the previous books. I know that I will really miss being absorbed into this universe, and wish that the publishers had ...
