The first step of writing any paper is finding a topic (or using one that has been assigned), and narrowing your thesis. A thesis is essentially your conclusion. It's the reason you are writing the paper, other than the fact you need to pass the class. A good thesis has, at least, these four characteristics: Clarity: Your thesis should be clear. Not only should it be easy to understand, but it should be introduced in your paper in way that makes it clear that it is the thesis ...

Your research paper must be thesis-driven. A high school level "report" will not receive a passing grade. The thesis must pull together the analysis that follows. Your thesis statement must be specific – it should cover only what you will discuss in your research paper and must be supported with specific evidence. The thesis statement usually appears at the end of the first paragraph of a paper. Early in your paper I should be able to locate the thesis statement. If I ask you "Where ...
