When Italy was unified into a nation at the end of the 19th century, southerners saw their language destroyed, their trade in agricultural products cut off, their land taken by northerners, mismanaged and looted. It's not surprising that the people who had been invaded by everybody from the Longobards to the Nazis learned a thing or two about sacrifice and tenacity, developed powerful ties to family and friends, and maintained a strong affinity for their countryside, even though many left ...

Yet Southern Italy in the ninth and tenth centuries was a complex and vibrant world that deserves to be better understood. In Before the Normans, Barbara M. Kreutz writes the first modern study in English of the land, political structures, and cultures of southern Italy in the two centuries before the Norman conquests. This was a pan-Mediterranean society, where the Roman past and Lombard ...

Angry southerners spread this story over the Internet, even via Wikipedia (which, we remember, can be modified by anyone). But this is completely false; people like Aprile bend history for their agenda, omitting the "thorny" part. One example. The first Italian railway - the Naples-Portici railway - was built in Southern Italy. This is true; but it is also half of what needs to be said. After ...
