And though Frances Mayes had been to Italy before, it was in Tuscany where she fell in love. Years later, in 1990, Mayes purchased her own home in Cortona, Tuscany, a 200-year-old farmhouse on five acres called Bramasole: "from bramare, to yearn for, and sole, sun: something that yearns for the sun," she later wrote.

Mayes' Tuscan reveries were revived for the big screen when the film version of Under the Tuscan Sun was released in 2003. Diane Lane played the Mayes character, but director Audrey Wells, who had adapted the book for the screen, changed some elements of the story. The steady Ed vanished, and instead she finds romance with an Italian man.
